State spotlight: Maternal Health

The Federated State of Micronesia maternal health clinics serve as many women's first entry into medical care or their medical home. MCH recommends and provides preventive health services in accordance with recognized standards of care. The program aims to improve clients' access to preventive health services through cervical cancer (Pap & VIA) and anemia screening. Because the preventive health clinics of the FSM all exist within the public health facilities, clients can avail themselves of multiple public health screening and preventive services in one visit. In this way, The MCH Program serves as the gateway to care through partnerships with other public health programs and other health and social programs. Once again, clients need not make multiple appointments or visit multiple clinics to participate in these program services, thereby allowing for comprehensive and cohesive preventive health care.
